Rawle v. Brown, Debt, May 1721

Source: Chester County Pennsylvania Archives, West Chester, Pennsylvania, Court of Common Pleas Narratives

Summary: In 1699, James Brown, Weaver of Chichester, promised 100 pounds to Robert Turner in writing, obligating himself and his heirs, but he did not pay. In 1721 (according to the date on the back of the document), Francis Rawle, administrator of the estate of Robert Turner, who had died intestate in 1701, sued James Brown, Yeoman, "late of Chester" and son of the deceased debtor, who was, with his mother, co-executor of his father's estate. Rawle asked for an additional five pounds for damages.
